FOXY FRENCH SKIPPER.

Found Stray Men of Sch. Olga Near Their Own Vessel.

Took Them to Magdalenes and Claimed Money for Rescue.

The North Sydney, C. B., correspondent of the Cape Breton Enterprise of Saturday says:
"Sch. Olga, Capt. Wilde, sails today for the Magdalens. The eight men who went adrift are all on hand, being picked up by a French fisherman only a short distance from their own vessel, which they discovered when the fog cleared, but the wise Frenchman would not let them land anywhere until he reached the Magdalens, and from there he communicated with the American consul to the effect that he had picked up the eight men, claiming thereby $10 for each man. Had he let them join their own vessel, without notifying the consul first, he would have lost the $80 grant. Capt. Wilde is still without his four dories but hopes to get them at the Magdalens."
Sch. Olga is the shacker of this port who had four of her dories go astray recently, and the men reached land safely afterward, as previously exclusively reported in the Times.

BROKE UP TRIP.

Sch. Catherine Burke Fairly Driven from Grounds by Dogfish.

Sch. Catherine G. Burke of Boston arrived at this port this morning with a very small trip of fresh fish. The craft has been out over two weeks and has been all over the lot, trying to find a place where they could get their trawls to bottom before the dogfish ate them up.
It seemed to make no difference where they set, Georges, Brown's or Cashes, the dogfish were there, and the captain says that all he has caught is dogfish. The captain says he never before saw them so plentiful and it was really impossible to fish on account of their presence.

Spray In Again.

The steam otter trawler Spray arrived at T wharf, Boston, yesterday, having been out about a week, with 41,000 pounds of fresh fish. As the market was low, the craft will not get any kind of a stock, indeed it is doubtful if 40,000 pounds of haddock, at the highest price quoted yesterday, $1 per hundred weight, would clear her expenses, for the trip.

Sch. Motor, 2000 large fresh mackerel.

One thousand barrels of fresh mackerel are due at Boston by steamer from Yarmouth, N. S., the fish being taken in the traps in that vicinity. The fact that the traps along Yarmouth have just begun to get big hauls causes many who study the movements of mackerel closely to think that the main body of the fish has been late in striking on the Cape Shore and that the fleet of seiners, which is way down off Canso and even to the eastward of that point, are ahead of the fish.

Fresh mackerel at New York yesterday sold at 16 cents each.
Capt. John O'Brien of sch. Mattakesett, which was at Newport yesterday, reports that there is a big body of mackerel out that way and thinks that when the dark nights come that some big hauls will be made.

A telephone message to the Times yesterday afternoon from Newport states that the whole fleet were in for harbor on account of a heavy southeasterly breeze and thick fog which prevailed.

Sch. Scud arrived at this port yesterday afternoon from dragging with 20 large mackerel and sch. Mary A., with 230 large mackerel, both trips selling to William E. Dennett, the fish bringing 18 cents each, or three cents higher than mackerel were bringing in Boston.

Sch. Actor, Capt. Frank Nolan, one of the netting fleet, is at Newport this morning with 2700 fresh mackerel.

It measured 220 feet high and 600 feet long and had three distinct peaks. The centre one was conspicuous from the fact that on each side its formation suggested the outlines of a human face.

All previous records in hatching fish have been broken by the salmon hatchery of the Alaska Packers' Association at Loring, Alaska. The hatchery during the past year turned out 67,643,000 sockeye salmon fry from 68,715,000 eggs and 1,837,000 cohoes salmon fry from 2,424,000 eggs—a world record.

The canning of codfish, halibut and other Pacific coast products will be made a feature by E. B. Dudden, of Seattle, Wash., in the future. He will handle these goods by a new process which has proved successful.

Sch. Springwood of Lockport, N. S., which has been pollock seining in the waters close to Sable island, arrived at Port Mulgrave, N. S., on Tuesday with 600 quintals of salt pollock. This is rather a small trip and would indicate that this fishery has not been successful this year. Beside the Springwood, another Lockport vessel is engaged in this fishery.

MOVE TO SETTLEMENT.

Minister Durand Makes a Call Upon Secretary Root.

Canadian and Newfoundland Fishery To Be Taken Up.

A despatch from Washington says:

"Sir Mortimer Durand, the British ambassador, called upon Secretary Root at the state department today, and discussed the diplomatic questions open between the two countries with special reference to the Canadian and Newfoundland fisheries.

"As a result of the ambassador's conference with the foreign office officials while he was in London recently, it will now be possible to make another move in the near future toward a settlement of this complex question. It will, for instance, be attempted to clear the ground for final negotiations by seeking to reach agreements; while, as to others upon which there may develop disagreements as to essential facts, provision will be made for the ascertainment of these facts, perhaps by joint investigation conducted by experts. Thus it is hoped that by next fall the issues will be so clearly defined as to admit of final disposition in short order.

June 8.
Salt Herring Coming Here.

Sch. Willie Matheson is bound here from the Magdalenes with 200 barrels of salt herring. This small cargo when the craft will carry 1500 or 1800 barrels shows that the news of scarcity of herring at the Magdalenes received here some time ago was without doubt authentic.

June 8.
ANOTHER SALT BANKER.

Sch. Mildred Robinson Arrived Home This Morning.

Reports Big Storm Destroyed Bait Traps at the Magdalenes.

Sch. Mildred Robinson, Capt. Wilson Cahoon, arrived home from a salt bank trip last night with 160,000 pounds of salt cod being the second vessel of the fleet to arrive this season.

The Robinson fished off Rose Blanche on the Newfoundland coast and found good fishing, when the weather permitted, on frozen bait. Since fresh bait time, like most of the rest of the fleet, she found poor fishing. The trip is a good one, as the vessel went away with her ballast in and carried only seven dories.

Capt. Cahoon says that he went to the Magdalenes last week for a last baiting, hoping to get a few more fish before coming home, but while there, on a week ago today or tomorrow, in company with about 70 other sail of vessels, all there for herring, he encountered a very heavy gale. It was necessary to lay with both anchors down to hang on, and the storm was so severe that nearly every trap was destroyed or blown ashore and wrecked. As it was getting late in the season and the herring were beginning to get scarce and also as the bait fishermen had had a good season financially, they did not seem disposed to rebuild their traps, so the bait season there was practically ended by that storm. Capt. Cahoon thought however that bait could still be secured at Grand Entry.

The Robinson came home direct from the Magdalenes, stopping at Louisburg. She came up the Cape Shore and saw no fish except one school off Louisburg. The rest of the way it was foggy and a heavy old swell going, and not even a bird was seen. The water was slick and oily as if fish had been there and gone along.

Capt. Cahoon makes about the same report as did Capt. McInnis of the Aloha in regard to what the fleet had done. He thought there would be lots that would make only one trip, while several would go to the Flemish Cap.

This is Capt. Cahoon's first trip salt banking for several years and he struck it all right. The vessel is owned by the Atlantic Maritime Company and the fare is on the market.
